James Warrand from the Australian National Maritime Museum

James Warrand will talk about the grounding of HM Bark Endeavour on Endeavour reef at 11 pm on Monday 11th June 1770 and the subsequent actions to save, repair and to sail the ship onwards to Batavia.

Finding information about your ancestors can be fun, rewarding, and frustrating. One tool that will help you meet your goals is a research log. Research logs can be used to write down your research goals, list the sources you want to use to meet your goal, and keep track of what you found and where. This will save you time so you don't search in the same places more than once. You will also want to write down where you searched and didn't find anything. Research logs are a great help with citing the sources you have used to prove the links between each generation of your family. You can read more about using research logs and download a research log template on the FamilySearch Research Wiki.

The Mephisto is the rarest tank in the world. To commemorate the centenary of the First World War, the Memorial has collaborated with the Queensland Museum to display Mephisto outside Brisbane for the first time since it was transported from Europe after the end of the First World War. Tanks were one of the First World War's major technological innovations. They were first developed by the British, and were later taken up by France. The Germans began developing their own tanks after the British first deployed theirs during the battle of the Somme in 1916.

Of Germany's A7V Sturmpanzerwagen, only 20 were ever built for use in war. They saw limited service on the Western Front in 1918, and today only one survives – number 506, "Mephisto". This WW1 German tank is currently on display in Anzac Hall at the Memorial, but its stay wraps up in the middle of this year so be sure to visit us in Canberra to see Mephisto for yourself. Free talks are held at 1.30pm on the following Thursdays: 2 March, 16 March, 30 March 13 April 27 April 11 May and 25 May
